- It's a tri-party contract involving – the student, a vocational training school, and an employer.
- The student is provided a stipend of EURO 1000 to 1200 (apprx. Rs. 90,000 - 1,10,000) per month for 03 years from day one of their Vocational Training.
- The training school is providing the theoretical training and employer is paying the stipend for work hours, the candidate spends as a part of his training.
- Trainees have the opportunity to earn money from the first day they start their vocational training.
- Upon completion of training, the candidate is granted a diploma certificate by the German government which is valid inside entire European Union.
- In normal case the candidate will be absorbed as a permanent staff by the employer itself after completion of Vocational Training.

WHAT ARE THE ADVANTAGES OF VOCATIONAL TRAINING OVER A STUDENT VISA?

- A student visa in Germany requires a 'blocked fund' of approx 11 lacs from the candidate prior to submission of visa application with the consulate.
- But in the case of Vocational Training, the visa provided is an employment visa and candidate's expenses are borne by the employer. So there is no need of proof of funds.
- After the completion of vocational training and get absorbed into a permanent job, the candidate can apply for PR after two years. So vocational training is considered as the easiest and only option for a 12th passed student to get a PR in a developed country like Germany.
- The students are given annual holidays to visit the home country every year.
